QBE INSURANCE PARTNERS WITH HEALTH & SAFETY EXECUTIVE ON ESTATES EXCELLENCE INITIATIVE

London, 21 June 2010

QBE, the specialist business insurer, today announces that it has partnered with the Health & Safety Executive (HSE) and the South East Stakeholder Forum on its Estates Excellence Initiative to promote the importance of risk management in commercial health and safety practice.

The Estates Excellence Initiative was designed in response to the strategy produced by the HSE in June 2009, 'The Health and Safety of Great Britain \ Be part of the solution', and is a key element of the HSE's ongoing drive to refresh and improve health and safety practice across Great Britain.

The initiative is currently being piloted with selected industrial estates in six areas of the South East, and has been created to help business owners and landlords improve health and safety on their sites.

The focus is on identifying knowledge gaps, providing on-site training and guidance and bringing businesses together through support networks and communities. QBE will support these activities by providing advice on risk management and making a business case for best practice at events held by the HSE for large firms from each industrial estate.

Heather Bryant, Project Director of Estates Excellence, HSE, said, "We very much welcome the involvement of QBE in this ground breaking initiative. Employers and businesses want to get health and safety right but have a lot on their plate, particularly in the current climate.

At QBE we are committed to sharing our knowledge and experience of best practice risk management and health & safety, and how this translates to improving claims frequency, severity and defensibility.
